<td>The Era of Andrew Jackson (1820 - 1840)</td>
<td>The Seminoles’ version of slavery was different from the European Americans’. African slaves lived separately from their Seminole slave masters, but both groups cooperated at times in planting and harvesting activities. Each owned large herds of livestock. The Seminoles required little labor from their slaves; instead an annual tribute was paid in the form of crops or game. This type of slavery was remarkably similar to many slave systems in Africa. Africans and Native Americans eventually lived together in maroon communities. Many African slaves became multilingual, some speaking English, Spanish, and the Native American languages. Hence, many African slaves served as translators for various groups of people. Some male slaves owned guns and hunted to supplement their diet. The “Black” Seminole slaves’ lifestyles were similar to their masters’. Their houses were made of timber and shingles, lashed to posts and rafters, and fastened together with strips of oak. The Seminoles intermarried with their slaves. If a slave refused to be sold, the Seminoles agreed. These characteristics of Seminole slavery are just a few of the differences between the European American slave system and the Seminole slave system. Abraham, a Black Seminole slave, served as an advisor to Seminole Chief Micanopy. He helped to negotiate and translate two important Seminole treaties. These treaties were the Payne’s Landing Treaty and the Fort Gibson Treaty. Both of these treaties dealt with the Indian Removal Act of 1830. These key pieces of legislation required that all Native Americans living in the south move to lands west of the Mississippi.</td>

| The Era of Andrew Jackson (1820 - 1840) | Another important Black Seminole slave was Cudjo. He was employed by the U.S. Government as an interpreter. Cudjo also helped to negotiate the treaty of Payne’s Landing. Another interpreter was Ben Bruno, an assistant to Seminole Chief Billy Bowlegs. The role of interpreter is an example of an important service that Black Seminole slaves rendered to their communities. The master-slave relationship had evolved into a new hybrid culture by the time some Seminoles were removed from Florida between 1838 and 1843.

In the 16th and 17th centuries, Florida did not have many people and it seemed to be a good place for runaway slaves to escape from Georgia and South Carolina plantations.

They joined another group of runaway Native Americans who escaped from the Creek Nation and settled in Florida to begin a new life; they called themselves “Seminoles,” which meant “runaways.” The slaves and Seminoles joined forces and a new people were born: The Black Seminoles.

In the early 1700’s there were more than 100,000 such Black Seminoles. The White plantation owners in Florida were uncomfortable about the presence of Native Americans. They believed that slaves would be encouraged to escape from their owners.

The African slaves and the Seminoles enjoyed a positive and productive relationship. The former slaves knew and exposed many weaknesses within the White plantations. The Africans also served as interpreters between the Whites and the Native Americans. Another interpreter was Abraham, sometimes called Negro Abraham. |

<td>The Era of Andrew Jackson (1820 - 1840)</td>
<td>Many times the African slaves married Seminoles and raised their children together. In 1818, General Andrew Jackson entered Florida to attack the Seminoles. These actions pushed the Native Americans and their African slave friends further into the interior of Florida. In 1819, Florida was taken from Spain and became a U.S. territory.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>When the U.S. Army entered Florida to destroy the Seminole villages and help more White settlers move in, the second Seminole War began. It continued from 1835 until 1842. The soldiers wanted to defeat the Seminoles and return the runaway slaves to their former owners.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>President Andrew Jackson wanted the Seminoles in Florida to move west to places like Oklahoma. Abraham, the African slave interpreter, went with a group of Seminole Chiefs to inspect the land west of the Mississippi River where the U.S. government wanted them to relocate. Nearly 500 African slaves joined their friends, the Seminoles, in the long trip to Oklahoma between 1838 and 1843. They would never see Florida again. Once there, the Black Seminoles continued to be troubled by slave catchers. About 300 Seminoles left Oklahoma and went to Mexico, where they worked as scouts and patrols along the border between Mexico and the U.S.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>After the Civil War ended in 1865, many Black Seminoles returned to the United States and worked as scouts for the United States Army until 1914. From 1873 to 1881, they fought hostile Native Americans in at least 25 battles, but not a single man in their unit was killed, and four of them received the U.S. Medal of Honor for bravery.</td>

RECOMMENDED STUDENT ACTIVITIES

Mathematics
- Create a timeline that shows the different events in the lives of the Black Seminoles.
- Compute the distance between Central/Western Florida and Central Oklahoma.
- List at least five methods of measuring time without using a watch or a clock.

Science
- Conduct research on the geography of the Appalachian region of Florida.
- Research and report on the caves of Northern Florida.
- Construct a sun-dial.
- Analyze a compass and explain how it operates.
- Discuss the methods the Seminoles used to navigate the rivers and travel the land.

Social Studies
- Working in small groups, discuss the idea of slavery within the Seminole Indian community.
- Examine a Seminole Indian Community in Florida today. Compare and contrast today's world with the world of "Abraham."
- Draw a map that describes the Payne's Landing Treaty, and the Fort Gibson Treaty.
- Construct a chart that depicts the different skills and knowledge that was needed by the African Seminole slave.

Language Arts
- Write a story about the life of a Seminole Indian slave.
- Compose a poem about freedom from a slave's point of view. Draft a list of laws that would guide the behavior of both slaves and non-slaves in a community.
- Research and report on "Maroon" communities in America.
